OVERVIEW

Maximising Partnerships Between Research and Advancement To Increase Funding

As research institutions plan for the future there is a need to diversify grant funding in an increasingly competitive environment. At the same time philanthropists, foundations and granting bodies are looking to collaborative models within and between institutions to maximise their research funding and create greater research impact. Research Offices and Advancement Offices are both engaged in attracting research funding into institutions. Although traditionally the two offices have operated independently, the changing landscape highlights the need for these offices to collaborate better to diversify and increase funding.

The Australasian Research Management Society (ARMS), and the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education (CASE) are jointly hosting a two-day workshop detailing how Research Offices and Advancement Offices can effectively work together to increase funding for research and development. This inaugural joint event will include talks, panel sessions and case studies on effective collaboration, as well as being beneficial to senior leaders responsible for research and philanthropy, staff of Research Offices and Advancement Offices, College and Departmental staff responsible for attracting research funding.

PANEL SESSION

BUILDING COLLABORATION: BEST PRACTICE GOVERNANCE

Research Offices and Advancement Offices often report through different organisational structural lines. This can lead to misunderstanding of roles within Offices and by senior management, and to missed opportunities. The panel will discuss best practice governance and processes to build an understanding of how each party supports organisational priorities.
