Driving change through advocacy – All Aboard in Auckland

Paul will outline the theory of change that places responsibility of the transport system decisions at the hands of less than a dozen people and how advocacy groups have been aligned and focused around reaching these people to drive the change New Zealand needs.

Paul founded Temple: Capital Investment Specialists in 2003 to support higher quality investment decisions for Boards, senior executives and sources of funds (Private Equity funds, debt funds and commercial lenders). His expertise is understanding market structures, the conduct of market participants and the performance that results from this as a means of informing entry / exit decisions.

Previously, Paul worked with McKinsey & Company and Partners in Performance. Paul is also founder and Director of kinaroad, a disruptive manufacturer of surfboards backed by a leading Australasian private equity fund in 2016. He holds a PhD and BE in mechanical engineering.

Paul founded The 1point5 Project, a not-for-profit backed by Sir Stephen Tindall, Phillip Mills and others to focus and amplify the voices of people targeting a 1.5C future. Over the past two years Paul has presented extensively on New Zealand's most pragmatic path to delivering its climate obligations and the gaps we need to close to doing so.
