

He tangata, The People: Designing inclusive spaces for citizens and government to reach effective solutions together

Participatory design is all about including people and listening to their individual journeys.

Inspired by her work in the field, placemaker Boopsie Maran will outline steps to foster relationships that bring the transport customer closer to their transport design experience. Boopsie will explore solutions for cultivating opportunities where people feel safe and heard, highlighting opportunities that create both a deeper sense of belonging and encourage citizens to be the champions of their own transport journeys.

Boopsie details tools to help place the human experience at the centre of city enhancement projects.