About Dr Michelle Williams

Keynote speaker Dr Michelle Williams is a recognised expert in toxicology and pathology. Her curious and innovative nature has led Michelle to develop cutting-edge rapid drug detection methods and investigate new technologies to increase the efficiency of drug and alcohol testing and management.

Michelle is enthusiastic about learning, educating others, fostering innovation and continuous improvement. As a keynote speaker, Michelle's popular topics include how to best manage drug and alcohol testing regimes and why some testing methods or regimes are better than others to achieve desired outcomes. Michelle has personally trained hundreds of pathology collectors in drug screening procedures. She has also presented information sessions to executives, union representatives and workers of various companies, government departments and organisations. Topics include effects of drugs and alcohol, types of testing performed, Australian standards for drug testing and policy development.

Michelle is also experienced in navigating the complex regulatory frameworks of the highly regulated pathology and toxicology industries including legislation, requirements of national accreditation associations and Medicare guidelines. Based on her experience in working with private companies, sporting organisations and government agencies including in child protection and juvenile justice, corrections and parole, defence, and health; Michelle can present ideas to help guide you in the best ways to manage drug and alcohol testing regimes in your company or organisation.

Michelle has delivered keynote presentations ranging from highly technical in content to her scientific peers to presentations tailored for specific businesses, government agencies and various organisations.
