About Warwick Giblin

Warwick Giblin has 40 years experience in major project assessment and determination. In 2011 he founded OzEnvironmental in recognition that rural Australians often need assistance to have an effective voice such that their interests are protected when addressing proposed major projects.

He has acted for more than 20 councils and numerous landowners across rural NSW. His skills include applying the EP&A Act and Regulation, impact assessment adequacy review and negotiating agreements that address environmental, social and economic costs that might otherwise be transferred to councils, landowners and residents.

Warwick is adviser to the Association of Mining & Energy Related Councils of NSW. He is also an Adjunct Professor, Faculty of Science, Agriculture, Business & Law, University of New England, a Fellow of the Environment Institute of Australia & New Zealand and a Director of the Council of the Royal Agricultural Society of NSW.

He has worked as an executive in both the corporate and private sectors and is a former Ministerial policy adviser.
