Invitation from the Collaborative

The South Regional Health Research Collaborative invites you to Albany for the South Regional Health Research Forum on Friday 26 August 2022. The South Regional Health Research Collaborative facilitates collaboration and community engagement in health research design, methodology, implementation and translation of findings among south regional communities. The Collaborative aims to identify and support research projects that respond to regional needs as they evolve.

This Forum is an opportunity for health professionals, community members, consumers, community organisations, local government, researchers and early investigators with an interest in research and quality improvement activities to learn about and contribute to research projects being undertaken across the southern regions of Western Australia and for clinical researchers to showcase and share their work. A local approach of targeted health research, collaboration and action facilitates better health outcomes for regional communities.

Key priorities

Along with the Collaborative's key purpose to foster collaboration and community engagement in research, this year's Forum will further explore the key priorities that were identified at the 2020 Forum held in Bunbury. These key priorities include:

- Demographics and lived experience of the ageing population in regional communities.
- Optimisation of community care for regional people with life-limiting conditions.
- Identifying key research questions for Aboriginal youth health.
- Chronic disease regional mapping and data sharing project.
- Local Government and community responses to mental health.

SOUTH REGIONAL HEALTH RESEARCH FORUM 2022

CALL FOR POSTER PRESENTATIONS

Collaboration and Involvement

To reinforce the Forum's key themes of collaboration and involvement in research, we are requesting that all abstract submissions for posters highlight the ways in which their research supports these actions.

Each applicant is to include a heading Collaboration and Involvement, highlighting the ways they have collaborated and involved key organisations and/or people in their research.

Considering the points below will also assist in guiding your abstract submission:

- What Collaboration and Involvement in research looks like: it means working with organisations, groups, people with lived experience, consumers and/or community to help define or prioritise what you research, and then involving these key stakeholders and people in the research project and translation. Your connection and interactions have changed and influenced what you research, who you involve and how you share the research outcomes.
- What Collaboration and Involvement in research does not look like: speaking to patients or interviewing people to collect data or participants, or giving a presentation on your research is not collaboration or involvement. These interactions have not altered what you choose to research, who you work with, or how you translate it.
