

Stephen O'Leary

Head, Office of Risk Management
Asian Development Bank

Stephen O'Leary is Asian Development Bank's Head of Risk Management. He joined ADB in 2021. He leads the office in ensuring that ADB's sovereign and private sector operations are sustainable by safeguarding ADB's rating, advising the Board and Management on risk issues and the implementation and management of a strong risk culture.

Mr. O'Leary, a national of Ireland, holds a Bachelor's degree in Commerce from University College Dublin, Ireland. He has more than 30 years of professional experience in banking spanning client coverage, trade finance, portfolio management and risk oversight. He has dealt extensively with performing and nonperforming exposures in developed and emerging markets. Before he joined ADB, he was Chief Risk Officer of HSBC Bank, Canada, a subsidiary of HSBC Group, where he has performed a strategic role in building out an enterprise-wide risk management framework and contributing to significant business and market share growth through collaboration with the retail and wholesale banking lines of business.
