

Uditi Agarwal

Program Manager, Global Designing Cities Initiative

Uditi is an Architect and Urbanist, with over 10 years of urban development experience in India across policy, planning and design. She specializes in public space upgradation, urban revitalisation and street design, and has worked across themes of climate change, culture, accessibility and road safety.

Uditi is a Program Manager with the Global Designing Cities Initiative since June 2021, and is based in New Delhi. She manages the Bloomberg Philanthropies Initiative for Global Road Safety (BIGRS) in India and Vietnam, overseeing the various interventions towards safer streets and safer mobility. Prior to this, she was working with the National Institute of Urban Affairs; where she helped develop some of the national government's initiatives such as the Historic Cities Program and the ClimateSmart Cities Assessment Framework.

Uditi has a Master's Degree in Housing and Urbanism from the Architectural Association, London and a Bachelor's Degree in Architecture from Manipal University, India.
