Training - Friday Afternoon, April 13, 2018, 3:15 PM - 5:15 PM

Criminals use the internet just like we do, to access, store, and share information. Using Recorded Future as well as other tools, we'll show how criminals take advantage of the open internet to surveil, coordinate, and attack your organization. From open proxies and registering typosquatted domains to discussing exploits on foreign language dark web forums, criminals often hide in plain sight.

Want to stop them? We highlight how threat intelligence can enable defenders to identify abused infrastructure, track vulnerabilities before disclosure, surface exploit development and POCs in the wild, hunt for new malware and RAT controllers, and even predict hacktivist actions and criminal patterns of life. Participants will be follow along live, as well as hunt for criminal activity themselves.
