With special thanks to the Madeleine Steel Charitable Trust! The Madeleine Steel Charitable Trust:

Madeleine Louise Steel, universally loved as "Maddy" was born on June 5th 2001 in the Simpson Memorial Pavilion in Edinburgh. She is Andrew and Veronica's first child and despite having numerous health challenges in her short life, she was mainly cheerful, highly engaging and was cherished by all her family. Maddy died in her mother's arms on November 24th 2001, following essential heart surgery for her Ebstein's Anomaly, but her memory and her fight go on in the treasured memories of her family and in the practical form of the Fellowship established in her name.

The Trust aims to endow permanent annual scholarships to promote transatlantic sharing of latest research and medical best practices in the field of paediatric cardiology. The Trust also supports related activities, such as visiting professorships and one-off medical research awards. We hope to provide opportunities for specialists to gain and develop better and more effective treatments for people with congenital cardiac conditions. Not only will we have a spread of returning trainees across the specialist centres in the UK, but we hope they will be passing on their new expertise to other specialists in the UK.

This programme is targeted at healthcare professionals who specialise in congenital heart disease. At the conclusion of the programme, participants will have a greater understanding of networking and standardised care, DORV and inherited cardiac diseases, and managing pulmonary valve replacement and TAVI through innovative strategies in the cath lab. Attendees will be able to apply learnings to their own practice on physical activity advice in patients with an ICC and consider novel and future therapies proposed for HCM. They will have a greater understanding of the role of both genetics and devices in decision-making in the care of patients with ICC. These learning objectives will be met through interactive lectures and Q&A sessions, networking opportunities and sharing of best practice both nationally and internationally.
