

Dietetics capacity and practice in Africa: An analysis of the state of affairs

Prof Richmond Aryeetey

University of Ghana (Ghana)

Prof Dr Richmond Aryeetey is an associate professor at the University of Ghana. He obtained his B.Sc. and M.P.H. from the University of Ghana and his Ph.D. from Iowa State University. Dr. Aryeetey's research is in maternal and child health, include mapping the social determinants of sub-optimal use of pregnancy and delivery interventions by women in urban Accra, food insecurity of HIV-infected adults, and piloting of eHealth applications in the context of health research capacity building.

Dr Matilda Asante

University of Ghana (Ghana)

Matilda Asante is currently a Senior lecturer in the Department of Dietetics, University of Ghana. She has a PhD in Nutrition. Prior to becoming a lecturer, she worked as a dietician at a Regional Hospital in Ghana. Her main area of interest is medical nutrition therapy with a focus on cardiovascular diseases. Other research interests include dietetic practice, food habits. and culinary nutrition. Dr. Asante is also involved in programmes that empower people with the skills and knowledge needed to make healthy food choices to prevent or minimize unhealthy eating practices and the chronic health problems it triggers. She is an examiner for the Dietetic licensure examinations and serves on the board of the Allied Health Professional Council in Ghana.