

Cynthia Semá Baltazar, is biologist and has master's in health science from Fundação Oswaldo Cruz in Brazil and a master's in public Health from Eduardo Mondlane University in Mozambique. She is undertaking an ongoing Doctoral Programme of Health Science from at Ghent University, Belgium. Currently she is the program director for the Mozambique Field Epidemiology and Laboratory Training Program (FELTP). She was the head of Surveillance Department at the National Institute of Health in Mozambique from 2010 - 2020, and the Head of Serology Laboratory from 2006 - 2010. Cynthia was the chair of the Scientific Committee during the 7th Conference of the African Field Epidemiology Network (AFENET) in 2018. She has researched on diverse topics, from infectious disease prevention and control, in particular cholera epidemiology in Mozambique and HIV in High-Risk Groups and co-authored more than twenty scientific publications.