

S33 Location choice and impacts of interregional migration

Convenor(s) Bianca Biagi; Claudio Detotto; Viktor Venhorst

Cities and regions interact through different channels. Among them, migration flows clearly play a crucial role. The movement of people across space is now considered to be of paramount importance for the dynamics of regional disparities and for the redistribution of human capital. The choice of migrating is a costly decision not only in monetary terms, but also from a psychological perspective and this cost of migration might change with age, gender, human capital, status and even cultural attitude of individuals including family attachment. The main aim of this special session is to look at the phenomenon of interregional migration, its determinants and impacts from a variety of perspectives such as human capital, territorial and family attachment. Any work considering drivers or impacts of interregional migration of workers, students, and individuals is welcome.
