20th International Conference on Diseases of Fish and Shellfish

European Association of Fish Pathologists

The European Association of Fish Pathologists was established in 1979. The objectives of the Association were defined as the promotion of the exchange of knowledge on and assistance in the coordination of research related to fish and shellfish pathology.

Membership of the Association has grown to over 40 countries. The International Conference, held biennially, with many members have expressing the view that the EAFP International Conferences are the friendliest and most useful of all the international meetings they have attended. Given the current situation, our main concern is the health of everyone involved. As the pandemic continues to affect all of our lives, including various travel restrictions, we have taken this step to minimise the risk to us all during this period of uncertainty.

Of course this is not the scenario any of us wanted when we started planning the Conference almost four years ago, we were very much looking forward to welcoming you to the UK and of course to our fantastic City of Aberdeen and beautiful country of Scotland. We have rescheduled Aberdeen as our Conference destination in 2023, we are confident that the Virtual Conference will provide vital sharing of knowledge and have the opportunity to network.

The Conference will now run online from Monday 20 September until Thursday 23 September, the four day program will include scientific keynote speeches, oral presentations, dedicated poster sessions, workshops and roundtables.

We are inviting Abstracts for both oral and poster presentations which will be subject to peer-review. In addition, there will be several workshops on a range of subjects of interest to fish and shellfish pathologists.

We are expecting approx. 400 delegates to attend. The official language of the conference is English.

Attendees can ask live questions and also give offline feedback. We have presenter, networking, posters, live Q & A and live polling platforms. Attendees will have the ability to choose a personalised agenda from concurrent sessions, delegates will be able to switch between presenters with a simple click of your mouse.
