

2023 Travel Award Descriptions

ISEE Travel Awards

ISEE Travel Awards are limited to current ISEE members. The applicant must be the presenter of their submitted abstract and be participating in the conference in-person. Exceptions may be made if the participant cannot travel due to extenuating circumstances. Volunteers of the society and student and new researcher (SNRN) members are especially encouraged to apply.

Dan Wartenberg Travel Awards

This travel award was created in Dr. Dan Wartenberg's memory to support conference attendees with projects involving communities and stakeholders in grappling with environmental or occupational health issues. Dan was widely recognized for his scholarship, but he found great satisfaction working with community members and stakeholders in defining their goals and advising on approaches to attain them. Attendees with projects including participatory elements are especially welcome to apply.

NIEHS Travel Awards

Scholarships funded by the NIEHS will be provided to young investigators, students, and promising scientists from the US and developing countries, with an emphasis on those who are underrepresented minorities or from disadvantaged groups. To apply, the applicant will provide, in addition to the details of their country, race, ethnicity, and student/new investigator status, information on their reason for applying, including potential availability of funds to cover travel expenses.

HEI Travel Awards

Travel awards supported through HEI are open to all conference participants and will support in-person conference participation. The applicant must be the presenter of their submitted abstract.

HEEDS Travel Awards

Travel awards supported through HEEDS are open to all conference participants and will support in-person conference participation. The applicant must be the presenter of their submitted abstract.
