

UNIVERSITY OF BIRMINGHAM

The 21st International Advanced School on Wind Engineering (IAS 21)

Sponsored by “Base for Innovations of Discipline to University on High-performance Wind Energy System and Effective Operation” Chongqing University

School of Engineering, University of Birmingham, UK

August 3 - 4, 2024

AIMS AND SCOPE

It has been reported that most economic losses due to natural disasters in the world have been caused by extreme wind related events, and it is hypothesized that global warming has the potential to further exacerbate this scenario through an increase in the number of weather-related devastating disasters. Buildings and structures are densely constructed in urban areas, and are becoming taller and slenderer, and thus more vulnerable to wind. As a result, wind engineering research and education are becoming increasingly important. However, some universities have only a few curriculums in the wind engineering field. In addition, students, young researchers, and engineers in the world rarely have an opportunity to take top level lectures by world eminent wind engineers and professors. The International Advanced School (IAS) on Wind Engineering was inaugurated by Prof. Yukio Tamura of Tokyo Polytechnic University in 2006 to cover this lack of relevant advanced professional training.

The lectures in the IAS 21 will deal with structural wind engineering issues and provide state-of-the-art scientific knowledge and the latest technical information in these areas. The IAS21 also provides the opportunity for direct contacts with world eminent researchers in the various areas of wind engineering for young students and engineers in Italy and other countries, and will be of great interest to students, engineers, and researchers who work in the wind engineering field and the building construction industry.
